NEW QUESTION: 1

The business need is considered to be the most critical step in the business analysis effort. Why is the definition of the business need considered the most critical step?

- A. The business need takes the longest time and costs most of the business analysis efforts.
- B. The business need defines the solution for the business problem.
- C. The definition of the business need determines future solutions, stakeholders, and approaches.
- D. The business need defines the problem the business analyst is finding a solution for.

Answer: C

Explanation:

Explanation

The way the business need is defined directly affects the solutions offered, the stakeholders involved, and the approaches the organization may take to seize the opportunity or solutions.

Answer A is incorrect. This is the definition of what the business need is, but it's not the best answer for the question.

Answer B is incorrect. The business need does not define the solution; it shows the need for a solution.

Answer C is incorrect. This is not a valid statement about this process of the business analysis effort.
